1. On 17 August 1947, the Ziethen Kaserne in Potsdam contained three armored brigades composed as follows:

- 4 tanks (one company - this was not full strength; missing tanks were being repaired)
- 4 companies (one battalion)
- 2 battalions (one regiment)
- 2 regiments (one brigade)

25X1A

Comment: In July this source reported the presence of 25 officers and 2,000 men commanded by Colonel Grumikov at the Potsdam Artillerie Kaserne. In August, he stated that these were troops for 16 battalions of 105 mm light field artillery and, later, that this was a special unit.

2. Also on 17 August, 403 Infantry Regiment was at the Potsdam Sued-Kaserne. Not specifically located in Potsdam, but on hand on the same date, was the 428 Engineer Regiment of the First Army. Staff of First Army is distributed over Potsdam, Babelsberg, Klein Machnow and the former UFA settlement. In command of First Army is General Yuliga.

3. As of 1 September, units of an army designated as "Army Stalingrad" began to arrive in Potsdam. On that date, four infantry divisions and one engineer regiment had arrived. This army is commanded by General Kvaternikov.

4. General Katikov commands the 328th Corps.

5. Up to 15 August, 11,000 of the expected 25,000 troops had arrived in Potsdam. These men arrived in civilian clothes, were put into uniform and distributed to various units throughout the Russian Zone. In late months, this source claimed, troops in Germany have been replaced every three months.

6. On 17 August this source observed the arrival of 5,000 armored troops
